DATA REFERENCE GUIDE

North American Industry Classification System (NAICS)

NO.7 January 2002

The Delaware Valley Regional Planning Commission is an interstate, intercounty and intercity agency serving the Philadelphia-Camden-Trenton metropolitan area. As the region's metropolitan planning organization (MPO), the Commission provides technical assistance and services to its member state and local governments. Delaware Valley Data is our periodic series of free reference guides, data bulletins and analytical data reports. This data reference guide describes the North American Industry Classification System (NAICS), a business classification system adopted in 1997 which replaces the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC).

Background

The North American Industry Classification System (NAICS) is a supply-oriented business classification system developed jointly by Mexico's Instituto Nacional de Estadística, Geografía e Informática (INEGI), Statistics Canada, and the United States Economic Classification Policy Committee (ECPC). It replaces the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC), a system that did not adequately reflect the changing industrial composition and organization of the United States economy.

First adopted in 1997and revised in 2001, NAICS is the first industry classification system to provide comparable data for Canada, Mexico and the United States. In addition to facilitating economic analyses for the three countries, the new classification system incorporates emerging industries and provides expanded and more detailed service sector categories. In addition to the supply-oriented NAICS, the three countries are currently in the process of developing a complementary market-oriented, demand-based product classification system (to be known as the North American Product Classification System, or NAPCS) that will eventually define and classify the products of all NAICS service industries.

Structure

Table I describes the structure of the NAICS. In a multi-level hierarchy similar to the SIC, NAICS groups establishments into industries based on the activities in which they are primarily engaged. The system relies on a production criterion where economic units with similar production processes are grouped in the same industry. NAICS-US has 1,170 industries that are catalogued into industry groups, sub-sectors and sectors (the highest level of aggregation). There are twenty sectors in NAICS, of which five are largely goods-producing and fifteen are entirely services-producing. Nine new service sectors were introduced with the adoption of NAICS in 1997 (identified in italics in Table 1). Revisions in 2001 resulted in additional changes to the construction and wholesale trade sectors, and also modified a number of retail classifications as well as the organization of the information sector.¹

Changes in classification definitions have substantially affected how businesses are grouped. Under NAICS, all establishments are catalogued based on the type of production processes employed. While this concept provides more meaningful categories, it has resulted in significant changes to certain industry classifications. For example, retail businesses and wholesale establishments that in the past have been grouped according to the class of customers they served have been reclassified. Auxiliary establishments that were previously catalogued under the same industry as their parent company, whether or not they were engaged in the same economic function, are now classified based on the type of services they provide, thus providing more accurate information about the service sector.

NAICS gives special attention to developing production-oriented classifications for new and emerging industries, service industries in general and industries engaged in the production of advanced technologies. This new supply-based conceptual framework is meant to group similar production processes together, in order to more accurately address the rapidly changing economy and identify expanding and contracting sectors. For instance, in the area of wholesale trade, traditional functions are now being outsourced to storage, finance, logistics or transportation specialists. In addition, the Internet has greatly expanded markets and supplier customer bases, requiring a revamping of how these activities are grouped and therefore classified.

NAICS uses a six-digit coding system to identify individual industries within its hierarchy. Table 2 illustrates this hierarchy using HMO medical centers as an example, and Appendix A provides a complete list of six-digit 2002 NAICS codes. The first two digits of the code indicate the most general category or sector; the third digit designates the sub-sector; the fourth digit designates the industry group; the fifth digit designates the NAICS industry; and the sixth digit designates a national industry unique to the country.

The level at which comparable data will be available for Canada, Mexico and the US is the five-digit NAICS industry level.² Since differences in the national economies require some flexibility in the system, industries that do not exist or are not recognized by other countries are indicated by the sixth digit in the code. A zero as the sixth digit means that the NAICS industry and the national (US, Canadian, Mexican) industry are the same.

Table 2: An Example of the NAICS Hierarchy: HMO Medical Centers

Major Changes by Sector

Manufacturing • This sector reorganizes previous classifications primarily to achieve compatibility with Canada and Mexico and introduces a Computer and Electronic Product Manufacturing sub-sector. Publishing and logging are no longer considered manufacturing industries.

Information • This sector recognizes the emergence of the "information economy". It consists of industries that produce information and cultural products, disseminate information, and process data.

Professional, Scientific, and Technical Services • This sector comprises establishments engaged in activities where human capital is the major input. The industries within this category are each defined by the expertise and training of the service provider.

² There are some exceptions. For some categories, the three countries agreed upon common industry definitions at a higher level of aggregation rather than the 5-digit NAICS industry level.

Educational Services • Administrative and Support and Waste Management and Remediation Services • Other Services • Industry classifications under these three sectors have been expanded and reorganized to better reflect the changing economy.

Health Care and Social Assistance • This new sector reflects the graying of the boundaries between the health care and social assistance industries.

Arts, Entertainment, and Recreation • This sector expands the number of industries under which businesses engaged in meeting the cultural, entertainment, and leisure needs of the population are classified.

Accommodation and Food Services • This sector recognizes that lodging and food services are often provided at the same location and that their importance has increased by aggregating them and increasing the number of industry classifications available.

Bridging from the SIC to the NAICS

More than two-thirds of the 4-digit SICs can be derived from the NAICS system, either because the industry definitions have not changed or because the new industries are subdivisions of the old SIC industries and can be recombined. The remaining industries will observe a break in the time series, and broad sectors like manufacturing and retailing will lose some of their historical comparability. For the 1997 Economic Census, the Census Bureau has published bridge tables at the national level and comparative statistics at the state level. Substate data will be published for NAICS only.³
